

The SUMMER
of Style

Shades

HOLD 'EM AND FOLD 'EM

CANALI'S first foray into eyewear makes a MAJOR STATEMENT

● The right shades don't just add instant cool—they can also become your trademark. Think of Dirty Harry's wraparounds, Hunter S. Thompson's yellow-tinted Ray-Bans, or Kurt Cobain's out-there oval frames. If you're still searching for the right fit, the timing couldn't be better: Italian tailoring house Canali is breaking into the specs game with a variety of vintage-inspired silhouettes and reissued lens tints dating back to the 1920s. With 15 shapes to choose from, it won't be long before you, too, find a signature shade.

—A. W.

Black aviator sunglasses ($400) and tortoiseshell sunglasses ($400) by Canali; jacket by Dries Van Noten; shirt by Finamore; G-Shock watch ($99) by Casio.

ACETATE FRAMES, GUNMETAL DETAILING, AND A RETRO KEYHOLE BRIDGE MAKE THESE AVIATORS PART TOP GUN, PART THE TALENTED MR. RIPLEY.

INSIDER TIP THE PERFECT PAIR

●●● Denim trends are always shifting, but if you're wondering how your jeans should fit right now, take a look at these from Citizens of Humanity (Premium Vintage line, Rowan fit, Joshua Tree wash, if you want to get specific). Not too skinny but perfectly tapered, with a slightly dropped crotch and a sun-bleached, worn-in finish, they could be from 1955 or 2025. And if you're quick about it, they could also be yours. —Michael Stefanov

WRIST WATCHER AN UNBEATABLE BEATER

●●● There's a time and place for investment watches, but usually it's not in the summer, when fair weather has you mowing the lawn, hitting the beach, and generally upping your activity level. For this, plastic watches are perfect. They project a casual vibe; they come in a spectrum of poppy colors; and, though they're tough to damage, replacing one won't break the bank. Alternate with a dive watch (see page 33) and the only thing you'll have to worry about is the tan line on your wrist. —J. R.

